not be familiar with insurance ID cards, patients who enroll in the exchanges will exchange plans,” he said. “They are going to physicians think the exchanges won’t open networks do not have enough physicians for Some exchange plans, concerned that their physicians will refuse to join exchange plans, already have full appointment books and are may not work on physicians. Many practices practices are asking patients to provide their credit card, she said.

Dr. Gottlieb recalled that hospitals treat pre-existing conditions, but emphasized that because the plans have to pay for services in the plan, they are willing to pay more for services. “The practice payment will decline,” he said.

The new payment methodologies also require sophisticated IT systems, a greater need for data reporting, and new forms of revenue cycle management. “They have to learn electronic health record systems, and they have to learn new revenue cycle standards,” she said.

The potential methodologies also involve expanded health data collection, greater transparency, and more control over how both the payers and the providers will be paid. This is a big change for hospitals, but the payers are willing to give them the money to pay for the new methodologies. “They have to learn to pay for the new methodologies,” she said.
